Be careful with the clamps in the box when removing the bike. Cut any zip ties that are holding the parts together and remove the packaging material which is wrapped around parts. Place all parts out, so you can see each one. It's a good idea to make sure all the pieces are there before you start riding your bike. Note: You can use the box that the bike came to build it, so that you do not scratch the ground. Step 2. Attach the handlebars If you have a bike cart, this is the time to fasten on your bike. Although it is easier to ride using a stand, you certainly do not need one. To attach the handlebars, slide the rod screws and book along with the top cover of the rod. Place the handlebar on the rod, making sure it is centralized. Apply a small amount of fat to the screw threads. Replace the top cover and the hand stick the screws back to the rod. Then, using your allen key, tighten the screws evenly on a x-pattern, making sure to keep the stem cap even when you tighten the screws. It is suggested that you align the handlebars with the forks. Finally, tighten the screws to ensure they are tight. Step 3. Install the Seat Post Now it's time to install the seat post. Apply a small amount of fat inside the seat tube or in the seat post and insert the seat post into the seat pipe. Align the seat so that the nose runs parallel to the frame and tighten the screws on the seat clamp. If your bike has a quick launch, unlock the lever and enter the seat post. Press the adjustment nut until the lever, when closed, holds the seat position firmly in position. You can always adjust your seat in the perfect position later, but always make sure the brandMother is not visible above the seat of the seat. Step 4. Install the front wheel first, remove the protective caps of plastic on the wheel if you still have no. If you are not using a Turn the bike up and insect the front wheel to the fork drops. If you have disc brakes, make sure the rotor is between the Caliper pillows. Slide the snow -free liberation and slide one of the springs on the axis. Put a light amount of fat in the footsteps. From the side with the brake rotor insert the axis through the wheel. Slide the spring back to the axis with the narrow end towards the cube and stick the nut. Ć As you continue to squeeze the nut, open and close the camera lever checking the tension in the scale. Once the resistance is attended, close the lever towards the frame to avoid traps when walking. Make sure the wheel is centered on the fork. Step 5. Install pedals to install the pedals, start by lubricating the wires of each pedal. Use an appropriate screwdriver or pedal key to attach a peddle with each crank brain. You can use an open or adjustable key if you have no boulder key. Look for an "l" and "r" in your pedals to determine which one is left to the left and right. The right pedal will squeeze in the hourly direction, but the left pedal will squeeze in the anti-hourly direction, which is the opposite of a regular screw. Step 6. Assembly Pron ©-Convere now is time to turn the bike back to do some tests and thin adjustment. Let's start with the guidelines. Looking directly down to your rod to make sure it is aligned with your front tire. With the side screws on the loose rod, you can gently touch the tire with the pion to align the tire with the rod. Once they are aligned, tighten the screws on the rod side. You can check your assembly with some tests: a pressure test, applying for pressure downward and upwards. And a round test, holding the bicycle and twisting the guidance and rod sideways. If the seat is © safe pulling up and down on the nose and back of the saddle, saddle, twist laterally. Check the brakes pulling the brake lever (s) and make sure the lever (s) is not summarized. For directions on how to adjust your front / rear brakes or derailleurs, please review the product manual. Now let's pump the tires up. You can find the recommended psi to inflate the tires on the tire side. Never exceed this recommended pressure because it may damage the tire. By last, around your bike and torque all screws for manufacturers specific to make sure everything is correctly tightened. Now it is time to enjoy the bike you just rose alone!
